George was a cat. He was very nervous. He had always wanted to go outside, ever since he was a kitten. He saw the door was open. He ran outside. He saw flowers & bees....and a fox !

The fox said "Can you see any chickens"?

George said "No not at all"

"Are you sure" said the fox

"Yes" said George

The fox said "Alright" and went back into the bushes where he came from.

George followed some paw prints. They were huge. They were not the foxes!

He found an old house and ran to see what was inside. He saw couches, a table and an old broken fridge and a wood burner. He did not understand why the wood burner was on because it looked as if the house had been abandoned for years. Then he saw something very big. It came closer and made a big noise. A big growling noise. It was a mountain dog. George didn't know what to do. He got his claws out and tried to escape but the door was shut, so he used his claws to climb up the wall.

"Please come down" said the dog "I never get visitors"

"Are you lonely"? Said George

"Yes" said the dog

"Then come and live with me"

They strolled back, but they saw the fox trying to get the chickens. The chickens were cornered, but George used his claws to scratch the fox's whiskers off. The dog barked very loudly. He scared the fox away. The chickens said "Do you want to meet our boss"?

So they went into the chicken house. The mountain dog couldn't get in so he found a bigger entrance. There were two turkeys who unlocked it for him. They were knights. Inside was a beautiful Peacock. She said "Welcome to my castle, where are you going"?

"We are going to George's house" said the dog

The Peacock knew George since he was a kitten "Follow the dirt track" she said "But look out for the fox"

They ran towards the house but the fox was very angry and he brought thousands of fox cubs. There was a big battle. The turkeys came with their army. The peacock flew through the air with bats. They shot ectoplasm at the foxes. The cubs fell asleep. The turkeys retreated to their base and the bats hung upside down in the trees. The fox and cubs were taken to a wildlife sanctuary.

George's owners loved the mountain dog and they all lived happily ever after.

Now this is the end of George's adventures.
